Summary

Since circa 13 years, my research focus on ectomycorrhizal fungi, their diversity, their ecology and evolution. My research questions aim at understanding how mycorrhizal diversity and their ecological or functional networks contribute to ecosystem resilience – and my fields focus on forests where the resilience might be higher, such as “pristine” forests in the Amazon, “ancient” forests in the Boreal and temperate zone. I’m currently assistant professor at Toulouse University, but working in Argentina in the International Lab IFAECI, to learn about networks and climate resilience.
